MANAGEMENT LIABILITY

In today's increasingly litigious corporate environment, the purchase of liability insurance for company executives is a key component of any corporate risk management strategy.

Management or Directors & Officers Liability insurance protects the company directors against claims that arise from decisions and actions taken within the scope of their management duties. The insurance policy protects the directors' personal assets ('Side-A cover'), as well as the company's corporate assets by reimbursing the company for any indemnities paid on behalf of its directors ('Side-B cover'). The policy can be extended to include corporate entity cover for the alleged violation of any securities laws ('Side-C cover'), when the company is involved as a co-defendant in a securities lawsuit.

Management Liability insurance often includes three other complementary insurance products:

Employment Practices Liability insurance (EPLI) covers the legal expenses and compensation demands from claims arising out of employment practice violations such as discrimination, harassment and unfair demotion or dismissal, committed by the company, its management or employees.

Pension Trustees Liability insurance (PTLI) covers the company (including any corporate trustee company), pension trustees, administrators, directors, managers and employees against claims arising out of any wrongful or negligent act committed in their capacity as a fiduciary at law of any pension or employee benefit plan sponsored by the company.

Public Offering of Securities Insurance (POSI) insures the liability of the company directors, or the company and its financial and legal advisors, arising from the investment prospectus issued in connection with the raising of capital through an initial or secondary public offering of securities (such as shares and bonds). The policy covers one specific event, the issuance of a prospectus, for a multi-year period that matches the statute of limitation for the legal liability associated with the issuance of such document.

What type of exposures can a company executive typically insure against?

- Regulatory proceedings for alleged fraud, corruption, tax avoidance, antitrust, pollution or data protection
- Collective/class actions brought by shareholders for mismanagement or misrepresentation
- Derivative actions brought by the shareholders on behalf of the company
- Litigation during or post a hostile takeover
- Insolvency/bankruptcy litigation
- Litigation brought by the company employees or pensioners
- Litigation brought by present or former company directors
